

CLEAN AND HEALTHY LIVING SPACES FOR SENIOR CITIZENS

Scientific approach. Global best practice. Risk reduction.

Tsebo is well versed in the specific requirements of both spaces and understands the nuances of cleaning and hygiene beyond the obvious to prevent cross-contamination of pathogens for safe, healthy and hygienic retirement environments.

Retirement villages are social, caring spaces where people interact daily with each other as well as with a range of staff.

Although many residents are physically and mentally well, there are others with varying health concerns necessitating different levels of care which means that, in essence, retirement facilities function somewhere between the hospitality and healthcare space.

THE CHALLENGE

Retirement and old-age homes are home to some of the most vulnerable members of our society.

The continuous traffic of staff, residents and visitors coming and going as well as the social nature of retirement villages, with restaurant, catering and entertainment facilities, these residences are highly susceptible to cross-contamination of viruses and bacteria from internal and external sources. Another consideration is the risks of slip trips and falls.

The elderly are generally also more likely to touch multiple surfaces as a result of the need for mobility assistance that increases the risk of germs being transmitted between surfaces. With many residents being immunocompromised due to advanced age or health concerns, the need to prevent viral or bacterial breakouts is essential.

Communal facilities are an integral part of the retirement lifestyle and while their high volume of use necessitates regular cleaning and disinfection, it's important to minimise disruption to residents and their daily lifestyle activities.
